ils splendid work, and to congratulate genue as the American stage can claim to-day. And Miss Brandon Douglas, and Miss Brandon Douglas, and Miss Flordlay, and Miss Brandon Douglas, and Miss Flordlay, and Miss Brandon Douglas, and Miss Flordlay, and Miss Brandon Douglas, and the Misses Bears. Wakeman and Mifflin played well-conceived parts intelligently and to the manifest satisfaction of the coupon-holders.

Mr. Ernest Hasting had the principal male role (that of the rector), and this young actor has never done better playing. He carefully avoided numerous opportunities to overset, and at the close of the third scene his work was such as to fully entitle him to the loud applause which greeted him.

Mr. E. J. Ratcliffe, as the repentant villate, was excellent. Mr. Ratcliffe's domestic troubles have not affected his ability as an actor in the slightest degree. In fact, there was a repression about his work last night which well southed the part he played and added greatly to its effectiveness.

But I mustn't go on telling you all about this play. Just let me add that Mr. Stockwell, Mr. Hatch, Mr. Swain and Mr. Barton faithfully depicted characters with which you are probably familiar, and then advise you to go and see it for yourself.

It is so much nicer than your "Gaphow" that I am sure it will pay you to try it. To be perfectly frank. I don't understand to this minute how Mr. Pitch could have written. "Sapho" in 1899 and "Lovers" I anne" in 1901. He must be a dramatic chamelson!

fashionable apartment nouse. They have been expecting an accession to the family. Their apartments were on the third floor, and as Mr. Small stapped into the hallway about 11 o'clock he saw smoke curling up from the floor.

He ran downstairs and across the street and shouted to William Roes, a grocer, to 'phone for the eagines, and then he dashed back upstairs, followed by Roes, who had sent in the alarm. Together they got Mrs. Small out.

The top floor was occunied by D. A. Kelly, a real estate dealer, whose tenyells and gastric fever. He was taken down with much difficulty.

Two alarms zero turned in. The whole of the upper portion of the building was burned. The loss is about 18,000.
